FEATURE REPORT ----- 8

To Catherine Frazee, life is a daily challenge that most of us would find hard to bear. Yet, her determined outlook and keen intelligence have taken her places, helped her to achieve goals and to get ahead in the world. The Alumni Association is proud to recognize her accomplishments by naming her the 1990 winner of the A.D. Dunton Alumni Award. In our feature report, we look at the remarkable life of Catherine Frazee.

Challenge Fund Helps Carleton Build

There's a lot of excitement building around the Challenge Fund these days. With the new library nearing completion, and the engineering building now under way, campaign organizers received welcome news last Spring that the Challenge Fund had passed the $14 million mark on its way to reaching its $15 million goal.

"We're really thrilled by the success of the Challenge Fund so far," says Carleton President Robin Farquhar. "Thanks to some hard work by our volunteers and generous support from all sectors of the community, we're ahead of where we thought we'd be by now."

With two years still to go in the Challenge Fund, organizers now believe the fund will even surpass its initial goal. "We're making plans to enhance the building program as a result of the success we've been able to achieve," says Dr. Farquhar. "Thanks to the alumni, community, and corporate support we've received, we'll be in an even better position to provide a high quality education and research environment for our students and scholars."

The University hopes to raise an additional $1.7 million for two of the Challenge Fund projects: an addition to the Herzberg Building and new facilities for the fine arts program.

In the first of these, plans originally called for two floors to be added to the University's Herzberg Building. This would allow the Department of Mathematics to move from the A.D. Dunton Tower to the science complex, thereby providing more space in the Tower for the Schools of Business, Public Administration and Social Work.

However, engineers working on the Herzberg Building have determined it is possible to add three floors to the building instead of just two. Since the cost of doing it all at once is considerably less than doing it in stages, the University has decided the three-storey addition would be the best route to take.

A principal beneficiary of the additional space will be the University's School of Computer Science. Since the Challenge Fund was launched, there has been a growing demand for space in the School for three reasons:

- a new cooperative program for undergraduate students;
- the introduction of a PhD program, joint with the University of Ottawa;
- continuing expansion in research activity.

In addition to the extra floor for science, more funding is needed for the fine arts program at Carleton. The University will be expanding its graduate programs in art history, music and film studies, in keeping with its goal of increasing the number of graduate students at Carleton. As well, if the Challenge Fund goes over goal, the University will enhance the gallery building called for in its original plan so that it would meet standards required to attract visiting exhibitions.

Minto Construction's Irving Greenberg turned the sod to start construction of Carleton's new Minto Centre for Advanced Studies in Engineering on June 11, while Board of Governors Chair, Don Yeomans, looked on. The $14.2 million building, financed by the Challenge Fund and the Ontario Government, will house classrooms, research laboratories, offices, and a 400-seat theatre. Minto Construction contributed $1 million toward the project, the largest gift in the University's history.

While the additional costs for these projects are more than $1.7 million, the difference is made up in government funds which have been greater than the University had allowed for at the outset of the campaign. That's great news to campaign organizers.

"Through good planning and good luck, it looks like we'll come out even further ahead than we thought we would," says the Chairman of Canada Cement Lafarge, John Redfern, who heads the Challenge Fund. "If we continue the way we have been, we'll have the opportunity to help the University over and above our original goal by providing even more space than was first planned."

Kenneth Storey, Professor of Biology and Chemistry, has received a three-year U.S. $357,940 grant from the Washington-based National Institute of Health to continue his study on how animals cope with extreme cold. For the past 10 years, Dr. Storey has been studying how frogs and turtles freeze in the winter and thaw in the spring. The NIH hopes that by finding out what happens in an animal's body that allows it to survive freezing without incurring cell damage, scientists will one day be better able to preserve human organs and tissue for use in transplants.

Dr. Storey was also recently elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada (Academy of Science) for his work in this area.

Brian Mandell, Assistant Professor of International Affairs, was the only Canadian and one of only 20 university professors across North America to participate in a new program aimed at bringing the classroom closer to the real world of international affairs. The program is a joint venture of Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government and the Pew Charitable Trusts. In June, Dr. Mandell took part in a two-week training session at Harvard designed to help program participants develop a case-study approach in teaching international affairs. He will return for one-week workshops in October and March. Dr. Mandell says he and his colleagues already use the case-study approach to teaching at Carleton, and expects this program to provide examples of how this can be done most effectively.

Fernando de Toro, Visiting Associate Professor in the Faculty of Arts, has recently been awarded a grant valued at close to $250,000 by the Social Sciences and Humanities to complete the third and fourth volumes of his history of Latin American theatre. This is the fourth SSHRC grant Dr. Toro has received for the project, bringing the total amount of funding from the Council to more than half a million dollars. The four-volume history, the first of its kind, covers the origins of the theatre in Latin America from the 1500s up to the present day. It takes in every country, from Mexico down through South America, and includes some of the Caribbean islands. Dr. de Toro expects that work on the project will be completed in three years.

Naomi Griffiths, Professor of History and former Dean of Arts, received an honorary doctorate from l'Université Sainte-Anne in Nova Scotia in recognition of her work on Acadian history. Dr. Griffiths was also recently elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada.

Vice-President (Academic) Dennis Forcese invests Chancellor Pauline Jewett with her robes of office at Convocation on June 7.

Associate Deans Named: Allan Riding, Associate Professor of Business, has been named Associate Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences; Leonard Librande, Associate Professor of Religion, has been named Associate Dean of the Faculty of Arts; and Gunther Bauer, Professor of Engineering, has been named Associate Dean of Engineering. All appointments are for a three-year term, effective July 1, 1990.

David Roberts, professor of psychology, has received a US $618,000 research contract with the Washington D.C.-based National Institute of Drug Abuse to undertake pre-clinical tests to determine the effects of various drug treatment therapies on cocaine addiction. Dr. Roberts has spent 11 years studying the effects of cocaine and heroin on the brain cells of laboratory rats. He says his research is intended to provide a model for clinical studies with humans.

Merit Award for Employment Equity

This summer, Carleton University was one of two organizations to be awarded a 1990 Merit Award by Employment and Immigration Canada's Federal Contractors Program for work in employment equity.

The award recognizes "Carleton's special efforts and outstanding achievements in moving towards a more representative workforce."

The Federal Contractors Program requires that all organizations that bid on federal contracts worth $200,000 or more maintain information on the representation of women, visible minorities, native people and persons with disabilities in the workplace.

Carleton has been a federal contractor since 1987. The University's employment equity plan was approved by the federal government in December 1989.

Super Mileage Vehicle Wins Two Awards

A high mileage vehicle, designed and built by engineering and industrial design students at Carleton, took two prizes at the Shell Fuelathon super mileage competition, held in Oakville, Ontario, in June.

Powered by a tiny 6.5 cc model aircraft engine, the vehicle achieved 200 miles per gallon using a new type of fuel developed by the Ontario Ministry of Energy. Known as M-85, the fuel is a mixture of 85 percent methanol and 15 percent gasoline.

Carleton's only competition in the class, an entry for California State University at Northridge, was unable to complete the course. That gave Carleton the $1000 prize from Shell Canada and the Ministry of Energy. The entry also won the award for the most innovative vehicle.

On the cutting edge...

Since 1984, the Carleton Literary Review has given its readers a chance to catch some of the rising stars on the Canadian literary scene.

A bi-yearly collection of poetry and prose produced by Carleton students, the Review has featured works by Betsy Warland, Daphne Marlett, Robert Hogg and Stan Rogal; interviews with Colin Browne and David Adams Richards; book reviews; and a whole lot more.

Along with works by students such as Geof Hajcman, Missy Marston and Pamela McLaughlin, the Review "attests to something positive happening at Carleton" (Quarry Magazine).

Carleton University recently received an award for its alcohol awareness program from Bacchus, a national organization dedicated to heightening alcohol awareness on Canadian university campuses. Shown at the awards ceremony are (l-r): Carmi Camicata, Chair of Bacchus; President Robin Farquhar; former student president Bruce Linton; student entertainment programmer Beth O'Shaughnessy; current student president Heather Fraser; and the evening's keynote speaker, artist Ben Wicks.

Fraser Taylor, Director of Carleton International, travelled to Hong Kong in April, and used the occasion to meet with Carleton alumni there. He reports that 20-30 individuals attended an informal meeting in the Jockey Club, and then met for dinner in one of Hong Kong's best Chinese restaurants.

Come Fly with the Ravens

This coming season, two lucky Ravens basketball fans will be off to Florida, courtesy of Thomas Cook Travel Agency, US Air, and the Ravens.

During the 1990-91 basketball season, Carleton University will run various draws and give-aways for its fans. All season ticket holders will be eligible to win these prizes.

Pizza Pizza, Club Monaco, and The Sports Page have contributed various gifts to be drawn at the games. Pizza Pizza has also printed the season tickets for both basketball programs.

The BIG PRIZE will be drawn at the final home game against the University of Toronto. The lucky winner will receive two round-trip tickets on US Air to Miami, Florida. The Ravens will throw in two tickets to a Miami Heat basketball game.

Season tickets will be available on campus at the Athletics Department, and at Information Carleton (located in the Unicentre). Or fill out the application below and return, with your cheque (payable to Carleton University) to Jon Love, Athletics Centre, Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario, K1S 5B6.

For further information on season tickets and promotions, contact David Kent, (613) 788-4480.

CATHERINE FRAZEE

■ Making the most of Opportunity ■

Catherine Frazee, BA/76, advises that “opportunity is something one ought never to take lightly.” And it’s clear that this year’s recipient of the 1990 A.D. Dunton Alumni Award for Outstanding Achievement follows her own advice.

Born with amyotonia, a rare disorder that robs her muscles of tone, Catherine hasn’t let her physical limitations slow her down.

After graduating with a Senate Medal from Carleton, she went on to Dalhousie to take her law degree, then started working in 1981 with Imperial Oil Canada. In 1988, she moved to Amnesty International, and in September 1989, was appointed Chief Commissioner of the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

She is extensively involved with community organizations, having served as a board member of the Canadian Disability Rights Council and the Canadian Paraplegic Association. She is an active member of Persons United for Self Help (PUSH), and has served in a voluntary capacity with the Canadian Special Olympics, the Canadian Association for Community Living, and Servas International. She also sits on the Advisory Board of the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

She’s even spent two months teaching health education in a small village in India.

All this despite the fact that she is confined to a wheelchair and can use her hands only marginally.

How does she manage it?

“As a disabled person, the biggest challenge is to develop a sense of self-esteem and self-respect, and that’s really tough,” she once said.

“But once you’ve crossed that threshold, once you are your own person and you’re happy with that, and proud of it, then no matter what the motivation behind the opportunity presented to you, you can rise above that because you know you’ve got the stuff.”

The daughter of a bank manager, she grew up in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg and Halifax. Her decision to come to Carleton was an easy one to make, and was based entirely on pragmatics.

“I picked Carleton because of its accessibility,” she says forthrightly. “I was determined to go to university and encouraged by my parents to do so. At the same time, I didn’t want to live at home.

“At Carleton, I could live in residence and get to all of the buildings using the tunnels. Transportation wasn’t a problem, access wasn’t a problem.”

She lived in Third Russell for three years, then moved off campus. “They were wonderful years,” she recalls.

“For me, it was first of all a point of breaking away from the family. Living independently was particularly significant because independence had so much to do with development and self-esteem. They were years of many challenges, but at that age, I had all the energy, optimism, and sometimes the madness, to take on those challenges.”

What she remembers most about Carleton, she says, are the people. “When I think of Carleton, I think of friendships and a lot of activity.

“For me, a person with a disability, I had somewhat limited social contacts in my childhood. I had moved into a regular integrated school stream at the Grade 10 level, and only then began to become more involved. By the time I got to Carleton, I was having a whale of a time. I became quite gregarious, interested in a lot of different things, discovering ideas and people.

“Carleton was a community where I had the opportunity to indulge that appetite. There was always so much going on, and it was all accessible to me. Whether it was to attend a guest lecture, hear a performer in Roosters, or meet a group of friends in a pub, I could do it all without a great deal of planning. There was a wonderful sense of community in residence that was so important.”

While the University was physically accessible to her, however, that’s not to say she did not encounter any barriers. Originally admitted into the journalism program, she was advised by a professor that it would be very difficult to pursue a degree in journalism because of her mobility.

“She encouraged me to pursue studies in literature and work in an editorial capacity, rather than a reporting capacity,” Catherine says.

As a result, she graduated with an arts degree, majoring in English and linguistics. Looking back now, she says, “It is quite ironic to be working in an area that has at its heart that people with disabilities ought not to be restricted by stereotypical views of what they can and cannot do.

“Sixteen years later, I think there are quite a few journalists with disabilities who manage quite well. There need to be more. It’s encouraging to me that we are evolving, and I doubt anyone would be given the same advice in the same way today.”

Her working career started in 1981

(the International Year for the Disabled) in Halifax with Imperial Oil, when she was hired on contract to undertake a study of employment opportunities for people with disabilities in the Atlantic region.

That two-month contract stretched into a year, and at the end of it, she was hired for a permanent job in Toronto, still with Imperial, to work as an editor of technical publications and promotional literature.

A year later, she was promoted to Product Standards Coordinator, but in 1984, when she first began to work on a part-time basis with the Human Rights Commission, she knew her days at Imperial would be limited.

"I'd spend a day at the commission in deliberations struggling with moral and social issues, and at the end of the day, leave to work on the computer about something dealing with lubricants," she says. "It was almost like two sides of my brain battling one another for attention, and it was becoming more apparent that my heart was with the commission."

In 1988, when she heard of a job opening at Amnesty International in Ottawa, she says "I didn't look back. All the pieces came together."

Her job at Amnesty was to recruit, train, provide services and generally keep in touch with 30 volunteer coordinators who are experts in one country, region or hotspot of the world where there are human rights violations.

"In my opinion, it's the best job at Amnesty," she says. "You have your finger on the pulse of every issue around the world, and get involved in high level bilateral and multilateral consultations. At the same time as you're doing all that, you're also very much in touch with the individuals who are the lifeblood of Amnesty International."

In May, 1989, the Chief Commissioner of the Ontario Human Rights Commission resigned a week before the commission was to meet. Catherine, who was then a commissioner, was asked to step in on an interim basis. It wasn't an easy decision ("I was just settling into my job at Amnesty"), but "it was an opportunity and challenge of such obvious significance that I couldn't turn it down."

She negotiated a three-month arrangement, whereby she would spend half her time at Amnesty and the other half at the Commission. Then, the predictable happened. She was asked if she would allow her name to be considered for the official appointment and, although she felt a strong loyalty to Amnesty International, she decided to "go for the greater challenge."

In September 1989, Catherine was appointed to the office of Chief Commissioner for a three-year term. It was a something she took on with a feeling of "trepidation laced with excitement. It was overwhelming."

She says that "although abuses that occur in Ontario are different and less sensational than those we read about from South Africa or Eastern Europe, the roots of discrimination go very deeply in our society and history.

"There are problems of intolerance and a lack of understanding. The patterns of immigration are changing, and there's fierce competition for employment, affordable housing, and so on. Groups are colliding because they're in competition with one another. As a result, we often see violence targeted against members of minority or disadvantaged groups."

Ironically, she adds, it can be more difficult to pinpoint instances of discrimination.

"Thirty or 40 years ago in this province, there were signs on beaches and restaurants saying no blacks or Jews were allowed. This was discrimination everyone could recognize and understand. It was ugly, but it was easier to deal with.

"Now discrimination can be much more subtle and manifest itself in our behaviour without our even recognizing it."

Perhaps reflecting her own optimistic outlook on life, she says "There are tremendous opportunities for us to show the world the richness and diversity of our province and to make an affirmation about our pluralistic society."

But then, almost prophetically during the interview in May, she adds, "As a vital first step, Ontarians and Canadians have to come to terms with our First Nation people. There is some urgency about that. The respect, understanding, and fairness with which we treat our native compatriots will say a great deal about our stature as a country."

With a staff of about 100 people and a budget of $11 million, the Ontario Human Rights Commission has the responsibility for enforcing legislation, but Catherine would like to see it play a larger advocacy and preventative role too.

"What the commission hopes to do is to re-orient itself to play a more effective role in dismantling institutional barriers, and steer us towards being the kind of society where everyone is treated equally and everyone participates," she says.

As for herself, Catherine says, she eventually plans to return to Rishekesh, the small village in India where she taught. "I said I would return, and that's my plan."

Note: Catherine will be presented with the 1990 A.D. Dunton Alumni Award for Outstanding Achievement at the annual Dinner/Dance, Saturday, September 28, at the Congress Centre. Please see the Homecoming ad for more details.

Invitation to a literary feast

When: Wednesday, October 17, 1990, 7 p.m.

Where: The Pink Pearl, Queen's Quay Terminal, 2nd Level, 207 Queen's Quay West, (York & Queen's Quay), Toronto.

What: You'll have a delicious Chinese dinner and lively chat with Joseph Kertes, winner of the 1988 Stephen Leacock Medal for Humour for his novel, Winter Tulips. (When we receive your money, we'll send you a copy of Winter Tulips. At dinner, we'll ask you for your favourite passage or, if you detest the novel, a passage to demonstrate why you dislike it. Don't worry. Joe welcomes constructive criticism.)

Here's what some of the critics have said about Winter Tulips:

What a pleasure it is to meet the people who fill this book with their lives. Seen through Ben's wily but innocent eyes, here's the world as it really is: funny, alarming, gentle, treacherous -- and blessed with hope.

- Timothy Findlay

This is a novel with a difference... It might well represent the novel of the future.

Scholarship Named for Bob Pickard

Bob Pickard, EngCert/53, was honoured at a special reception at Carleton on June 13.

The occasion was the official launching of the new Robert Pickard Scholarship in Environmental Engineering, which will provide tuition for an outstanding full-time student proceeding from third to fourth-year engineering who has demonstrated an interest in problems in environmental engineering.

More than 100 local corporations, individuals and friends contributed $32,000 to endow the scholarship in Bob's name on the occasion of his retirement as Commissioner of Environmental Services for the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. It was the second major honour he received; the Greens Creek Pollution Control Plant was also named in his honour.

Bob says simply that he was "overwhelmed by these honours. I had no expectation or idea that such things were even being contemplated. It's very gratifying, and at the same time, very humbling."

Bob's career in the region spans more than 30 years, dating from 1957, when he first joined the Planning and Works department of the City of Ottawa. In subsequent posts as Director of Planning and Works for the City of Gloucester (1963-68); Development Manager for Costain Ottawa (1969-71); and Chief Administrative Officer for the City of Gloucester (1972-1984), he has overseen some of the most extensive development projects in the region.

"Being part of the transition of Gloucester from a rural municipality to a very active urban centre was probably the highlight of my career," he says.

"In 1963, when I first joined the city, they had a clerk, a treasurer, and a building inspector who doubled as the welfare officer in the winter months. We had to develop the infrastructure for the city, including everything from the fire department, to planning, to recreation. It was an exciting place to be."

Bob is also proud of his work with the region, which included the expansion of the Britannia Water Filtration Plant and the Greens Creek Pollution Control Centre. "While there's much still to be done, I think we got off to a good start," he says. "In the next few years, as the plant becomes operational, we should see a noticeable improvement in the quality of the environment."

A native of Ottawa, Bob says he came to Carleton "when it was just a house on the corner of First Avenue and Lyon" because he wanted to study engineering and couldn't afford to leave the city to do it.

But his years at Carleton, he says, were "probably the best years of my life. We had a small class of 28-30 students, and all got along well together. While he worked hard, we played hard and had a fun time as well. Many of the people I met at Carleton have been my life-long friends."

He admits, too, to having spent more than a few days at the old Bytown Inn. "It was the equivalent of the pub they have on campus now," he says. "Downstairs, the men's beverage room was traditionally where the Carleton types met and talked over the cares of the world."

Married for 35 years, he met his wife Helen when they were students at Carleton, and they now have three grown children.

From his perspective, Bob feels the current public interest in environmental concerns has gone overboard. "It's quite frustrating when you're trying to do the right thing and always having the rug pulled out from under you by people who are generally ill informed and don't have the facts," he says. "But it's the trend and we have to live with it. It requires considerably more planning and expense, and I don't believe the results are any better than they were 25 years ago."

President Robin Farquahr presents a copy of Art Carleton to Bob Pickard at June 13 reception.

Remember when you were a student at Carleton?
The friendships you made?
The good times you had?
The feeling of belonging to a University community?

Bring those memories back to life this Fall on Homecoming Weekend, September 28-30, 1990. Get together with former classmates, enjoy a great day of college football, then come out for the dinner/dance at the Congress Centre.

Walk on campus in the fall, with the crisp air and bright leaves, and it will seem like only yesterday you were heading for class together. . .

Journalism alumni who registered in the one-year program in 1969, held a reunion in the Faculty Club on May 25. The next day, they gathered at the home of one of their celebrated colleagues, Doug Small (pictured here in the back row, third from left), who recently was acquitted of the charge he faced for leaking budget information.

President's Message

Volunteers Make It Happen

by Clay Beattie, President,
Carleton University Alumni Association

A lot has happened to the Alumni Association over the past two years that I have served as President.

We've established branches across the country; organized a National Alumni Council; raised close to $3 million for the University; raised our profile and participation on the Board of Governors; strengthened programs such as Homecoming; and embarked on ambitious new undertakings such as Send Off.

I've taken a great deal of pride and satisfaction in seeing this growth and development. But I am also keenly aware that it could only have happened through the commitment and dedication of many volunteers.

In this column, would like to thank all those who lent their assistance and support over the past two years. While I can't mention everyone without taking up too much time and space, there are a number of individuals I would especially like to single out.

Jim Watson, as past-president of the association, continued to give us the benefit of his sage advice and rapport with student groups on campus. His willingness to host events for us and do anything he could to further the objectives of the Association have been warmly appreciated.

Peter Pivko, who chaired the Homecoming Committee for the past three years and remains involved with this year's program, has given countless hours to the Association. It's a tribute to his abilities and leadership that this program has grown into the premier fall event at the University.

Pat Finn, as chair of the Services Committee, has overseen the introduction and growth of the group life insurance program, a seminar series, a photography program at Convocation, and soon-to-be inaugurated, an affinity card program with the Bank of Montreal. I have appreciated her willingness to help out, her advice, and her wit.

Jack McAuley, as chair of the Luncheon Speakers program for the past three years, has done an admirable job in attracting quality speakers and building this program into a highly successful tradition for the Ottawa alumni.

Drew Love, as President of the Ottawa branch and chair of our Constitution committee, played a key role in building a strong local chapter, and in rewriting the alumni constitution.

Nancy Coldham, through her dynamic leadership in Toronto, has helped to build the scope of activities and increase participation in programs there.

And elsewhere across the country, branch presidents and alumni have all given of their time and efforts to establish a presence for our association in their communities and to make possible programs such as Send Off. These include Jack Strawbridge and Eleanor Nesbitt-Friis in St. John's; Jone Mitchell in Halifax; Don Climo in Montreal; Bob O'Kell and David Walker in Winnipeg; Lindsay Franklin in Calgary; John McGee and Debbie Scott Lambur in Edmonton; Bob Hindson in Vancouver; and Vic Owen in Victoria.

Finally, I would like to thank the countless alumni who have lent their support to our efforts by participating in our programs, and by supporting the Challenge Fund. Your support have made our efforts worthwhile as we seek to make the Association an organization one that you can be proud of.

This fall, my term as President will end. I will take with me fond memories of the people I've met and worked with, the friendships I've made, and the goals we've accomplished. I wish my successor the best of luck in meeting the challenges and opportunities in the years ahead.

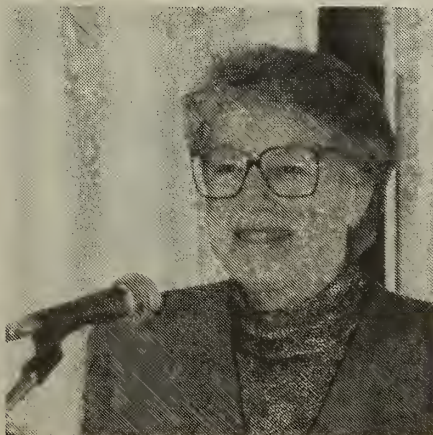

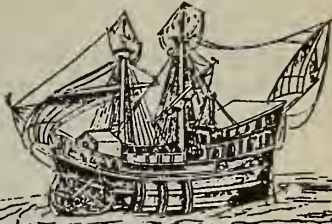

The biggest crowd ever - more than 250 people - gathered for the sixth annual Spring Fling in Toronto, held in the John Molson Room, May 25.

Send Off receptions, sponsored by the Alumni Association for students coming to Carleton this fall, were held in 19 locations across Canada in July and August, including this one at the home of Jone and Ted Mitchell in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Carleton's new Chancellor, Pauline Jewett, ably assisted by MP Howard McCurdy, were suddenly thrust into the limelight at the Alumni Association luncheon on June 1, when scheduled speaker, Audrey McLaughlin was called to a last-minute conference by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. The two speakers put on an entertaining and informative talk for the 150 people in attendance.

IDEALS VS. REALITIES

Sometimes things don't work out exactly as you'd expected. Unforeseen circumstances can dramatically affect your plans for the future.

But adversity needn't be financially debilitating. You can protect your family against misfortune with a sound insurance plan. And there's only one group term life insurance program that's endorsed by your alumni association. It's offered by North American Life.

Your Carleton alumni plan offers you such special features as: low group rates; portable protection that moves with you; guaranteed renewable coverage; waiver of premium if you become totally disabled.

If you have any questions, call NAL toll-free 1-800-668-0195 (in Toronto, 229-3000) for assistance or a free brochure. You can also contact your NAL representative or call Bob Sonier, the Carleton Alumni Insurance Consultant, at (613) 722-1742.

A Matter of Degree

This distinctive display diploma is now available for Carleton University graduates from all programs and all years.

Designed with quality and tradition in mind, this special-purchase diploma is similar to the University's new standard diploma, but incorporates these special features:

- an attractive 11 x 14 inch portrait-style format
- a full-colour illustration of the original coat-of-arms
- elegant and classic typography on creamy vellum paper
- hand-lettered calligraphy for your name and degree
- signatures of the President and Chancellor at the time of your graduation
- a beautiful embossed seal

This diploma will make an impressive professional statement on your home or office wall. It is an ideal gift for graduation or to mark a special occasion.

The purchase price of $60 covers the cost of handling, mailing charges and provincial sales tax. Please allow two-three weeks for delivery.
